This catalogue is a fourth, amplified edition of the „Catalogue of the Pictures and Sculpture in the Royal Picture Gallery (Mauritshuis) at the Hague”, published in 1893.

Like in all the catalogues, published by the Direction of the Gallery (1), the works of art are mentioned in alphabetical order.

The pictures and sculpture are described in two separate chapters. The terms Dutch, Flemish and French School of this catalogue correspond to „Hollandsche”, „Vlaamsche” and „Fransche School” on the frames and are placed according to the Dutch alphabet: Dutch between Holbein and Hondecoeter, Flemish between Vinckboons and Vlieger, French between Francken and Fijt.

The measures of the pictures are given in metres; the height is given always before the width.

Using the catalogue in the Gallery first look to the name on the work of art and, after having found it in this catalogue, look for the corresponding number.

History of the Building and the Collection.

The Mauritshuis, the building which contains the Royal Gallery of Pictures, was built between 1633—1644 by the architect Pieter Post of The Hague for Count (afterwards Prince) Johan Maurits van Nassau, Governor of Brazil, after the plans of the famous architect Jacob van Campen, who also made the plans for the Town Hall in Amsterdam.

The Prince decorated his palace with many valuable works of art, among which were landscapes, painted by Frans Post in Brazil as a souvenir of the time, spent by the Prince in that country.

After his death, on Dec. 20th, 1679, the Mauritshuis fell into the hands of his creditors, who let it to the States General, by whom it was used to serve as a hotel for the ambassadors of foreign states. In December 1704, when the Duke of Marlborough resided there, the palace was entirely destroyed by fire and only the walls remained. When it was rebuilt (1718), the exterior was restored to its primitive state, while in the interior the arrangements were greatly simplified.

Afterwards the building was used by the Government for very different purposes. About 1797 it even served as a prison and the cellars were let to wine merchants. In 1807 the National Library was established in the Mauritshuis.

On May 13th, 1820, the Mauritshuis became the property of the State for f 35.000. A few monthes afterwards, on July 10th 1820, a Royal Decree destined it to be the depository of the Royal Gallery of Pictures and of the Museum of Curiosities. In 1875 the curiosities were removed out of the building and since that year all the rooms of the Mauritshuis have been used for a picture gallery.

The nucleus of this small but choice collection is formed by the gallery which formerly belonged to Prince Willem V. Little remains of the art collections of his predecessors, although Prince Maurits had commissioned J. A. van Ravesteyn to paint his staff-officers and Esaias van de Velde to paint his battles, and Prince Frederik Hendrik had been an enthusiastic collector and a Maecenas, who gave commissions to several painters, like Rembrandt, Gerard Honthorst, Gonzales Coques, Adriaen Hanneman and several others.

His widow also was a lover of pictures and she decorated her palace, the Huis ten Bosch (House in the Wood), with the famous works by Jordaens and others, which are still admired there.

Prince Willem II and the King-Stadhouder Willem III had a beautiful collection of pictures, the latter at the castle called het Loo. The Stadhouders of Frisia (Friesland) and Willem V also collected works of art.

Some pictures of the collection of Willem V were formerly at the castles Honsholredijk and Oranienstein, at the palace at Leeuwarden and at The Loo; others were donations to him or chosen by this prince from the best private collections of that time, such as those of Lormier, d'Acosta, de Neuville, de la Court, Braamcamp and G. van Slingelandt.

This last collection, bought by Willem V for f 50 000, consisted of 40 pictures, which belong to the finest of the Gallery.

When Willem V had left the Netherlands, the French carried off his pictures to Paris. This took place on the 7th of June 1795. The pictures were exhibited in the Louvre with the other works of art, selected from the most important galleries of Europe. The Government of the Batavian Republic tried to overcome this loss by forming in 1798 a new collection in the Huis ten Bosch, which contained in 1800 a number of 201 pictures, which however were removed to Amsterdam in 1808.

After the battle of Waterloo the works of art, taken by the French, had to be returned from Paris to whom they belonged. In 1815 Colonel de Man, Mr. J. Z. Mazel and some other gentlemen were sent to Paris to bring back our pictures. There was a great opposition against returning them, and Louis XVIII refused his consent. Our representatives had to execute their mission by force and under a military escort on 19-22 September. Wellington did much to help the Netherlands in recovering their works of art. The pictures were brought back in ambulance-waggon, first to Brussels and then home to the Hague, where they entered the 20th of November 1815, the canons thundering, the bells ringing and the people cheering. 1)

After the Royal Decrees of Nov. 20th, 1815 and June 23rd, 1816, King Willem I placed the collection of pictures under the superintendence of the Commissioner-General for Art and Sciences. From that time this museum has taken its place among the institutions of the Dutch State and all the expenses of keeping up and augmenting the collection are paid out of the public treasury.

Provisionally the pictures were placed in the rooms of the old Gallery of Willem V (near the Gevangenpoort). In August 1821 they were transferred to the Mauritshuis.

Under the reign of King Willem I several pictures were bought by the State; the most important are Vermeer's „View of Delft” in 1822, and Rembrandt's „Lesson of Anatomy” in 1828.

Between 1831 and 1874 the collection was not increased. Since then it has been enriched with several pictures, some of which are donations, bequests or loans.

Among the most important acquisitions must be mentioned two portraits by Frans Hals (purchased in 1881); a study of a head by Rembrandt, dating from the master's best period (1650), which became the property of the State in 1891, and a view on the shore near Scheveningen by Simon de Vlieger. In 1896 the beautifully painted „Linnet” by Carel Fabritius returned to its native country; in 1897 a fine work of Adriaen Brouwer was purchased.

In 1898 the Direction bought a little portrait by Frans Hals, while, since 1902, Willem Kalf also is represented in the Gallery with a still life and, since 1903, Aert van der Neer with an eminent moonlight.

1) Not all the pictures were brought home from France; about 68 of them, which fortunately were the least important ones of the collection, are still missing.

The collection was augmented in 1903 by twelve pictures, bequaethed by the late Mr. A. A. des Tombe at the Hague. Among these is the well known head of a girl by Jan Vermeer of Delft.

And, last not least, from 1904 till 1910 were exhibited in the Gallery a remarkable portrait by Thomas de Keyser (bequest of the Dowager Grisart), a fine portrait by Janson van Ceulen (bequest of the Dowager van Bylandt) and seven pictures, bequeathed by the late Dr. Blom Coster at the Hague. Among these is a fine portrait by Hanneman. Bequests also were received from the late Miss Roels, from Miss Singendonck (fine portraits; among them works by Maes, Netscher & c.), while Mr. Nardus presented three pictures. Dr. A. Bredius — who was a Director of the Gallery for twenty years (1889—1909) — has lent several of the most remarkable gems among the pictures, now on view on the walls of the museum: works by Rembrandt, Cuyf, Ostade, Vermeer & c. In 1910 a beautiful landscape by Jacob Ruysdael has been presented by Dr. C. Hofstede de Groot.

By acquiring from time to time such valuable additions, the Picture Gallery in the Mauritshuis may maintain its place among the choicest public collections in Europe.

REMBRANDT. Rembrandt Harmensz. van Rijn, Dutch painter and etcher of portraits, historical subjects and landscapes, born July 15th, 1606 at Leiden, buried Oct. 8th, 1669 at Amsterdam. Pupil of Jacob van Swanenburch at Leiden and about 1623 for nearly six months of Pieter Lastman at Amsterdam. He lived at Leiden until about June 1631; afterwards at Amsterdam until his death. As a painter and an etcher he surpasses all other Dutch artists in rendering nature picturesque in its most varied revelations, in masterly managing the chiaroscuro and (what concerns his portraits) in perfectly expressing character. Although he was during the greater part of his career a celebrated and well-paid artist, he had in the last years of his life (1654—1669) to struggle with great pecuniary troubles, which however had never a bad influence on his work. His best pictures are even dating from that time, a. o. Burgomaster Six (1654) and the Syndics (1662). Until his death he worked with unbroken strength, always aspiring after the higher and better and always attaining it. Of his nearly 600 pictures, Holland possesses no more than about 33, of which 17 are in the Mauritshuis.
